

I would like to document my strong objection to the FCC permitting the use of cell phones on airplanes. In my experience, people who use their cell phones on public transportation are generally loud and insensitive to the people who surround them. In addition, I have witnessed several conflicts that arose from people who were enraged at being captive audiences to such behavior. My mother is a flight attendant and regularly tells stories of passengers who become hostile and aggressive when told to turn off their phones. Allowing cell phone use on planes would only increase the frequency of such occurrences. A passenger on an airplane is confined with many strangers in close quarters. Please don't make that experience more unpleasant than it already is.
